INVITING EXECUTIVES & BOARD MEMBERS TO PARTICIPATE IN A RESEARCH PROJECT ON BUILDING RESILIENCE IN CRITICAL INFRASTRUCTURE

The Role of the Executive and Board in building organisational resilience

The need for crisis management capability at the executive level has risen in both profile and strategic relevance as the probability and frequency of organisations being impacted by crisis becomes more commonplace.

The increasingly diverse risks that critical infrastructure owners and operators face, the resulting public and political scrutiny and the interdependencies within the supply chain, present significant challenges.

Janellis have been working with executives and boards within organisations owning and operating critical infrastructure since 2006 and we have insights into the changing priorities and approaches in the areas of crisis management and organisational resilience.

To share the most current thinking in this area, we are conducting a research activity with executive leaders and boards on the challenges and opportunities in building resilience. The focus areas will include:

- * The value of resilience in protecting and supporting the organisation's strategic initiatives
- * Key approaches to building resilience – targeted vs strategic
- * The role of the executive and board in a crisis

The key findings will be published in a special report and presented at an event that you will be invited to attend. If you would like to participate in this study please register your interest online at janellis.com.au/research.

Research

Interviews with executive leaders and boards on the organisational expectations, challenges and solutions for preparing for and managing crises.

Report

A detailed, evidence-based report that will provide up to date insights and learnings from executives within leading organisations from Australia and overseas.

Forum

Presentation of the findings at a series of interactive events attended by executives, practitioners and response teams from participating organisations and agencies.
